The court denied in part one U.S.-based defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's direct infringement claims for failure to state a claim. "[The accused brand's] and [the moving Defendant's] webpages show some relationship between the companies, and, taking in [Plaintiff's] favor the allegations that [the brand's] website holds out [the movant] as its U.S.-based warehouse address and [the movant's] e-commerce business includes assisting clients like [the brand] with importation and sales, it is plausible that [the movant] sells or offers for sale the accused products in the course of its business with [the brand]."

└ Marking & Notice of Infringement

The court granted one defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's claims for pre-suit damages for failure to state a claim. "[Plaintiff] summarily alleges that [the movant] and its co-defendants 'had or should have had' knowledge of the asserted patents but does not allege that [Plaintiff] marked its products or committed an affirmative act that provided actual notice to [Defendant] of the patents and [Defendant's] alleged infringement. [Plaintiff] thus has not alleged pre-suit notice and so cannot recover pre-suit damages against [Defendant]."

The court denied one defendant's motion to dismiss on the ground that plaintiff failed to sufficiently allege pre-suit knowledge. "Though 'district courts across the country are divided over whether a defendant must have the knowledge necessary to sustain claims of indirect and willful infringement before the filing of the lawsuit,' this Court agrees with the reasoning and conclusion of its colleagues in this District that pre-suit knowledge is not required and the complaint itself can provide the necessary notice for post-suit willful or induced infringement."
