Complaint -- Infringement N/A

Ricoh Company, Ltd. has filed a patent infringement suit in the District of Delaware against Zoom Communications, Inc. f/k/a Zoom Video Communications, Inc., alleging infringement of seven U.S. patents related to cloud-based video conferencing, interactive whiteboards, transmission management, and display control technologies. The accused products include Zoom Meetings, Zoom Rooms, Zoom Sessions, Zoom Webinars, Zoom Whiteboard, and Zoom Cloud Recording. Ricoh asserts direct, indirect, and willful infringement under 35 U.S.C. § 271, seeking monetary damages, enhanced damages for willful infringement, injunctive relief, attorneys' fees, and other remedies. The complaint alleges that Zoom had knowledge of the asserted patents, including through a notice letter sent in April 2024, and that Zoom's continued activities constitute willful infringement. Ricoh is represented by Ashby & Geddes and Norton Rose Fulbright US LLP. Jurisdiction is based on 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1338, and venue is asserted as proper in Delaware due to Zoom's incorporation and business activities in the district.

Renewed Motion - Motion to Dismiss - Failure to State a Claim (FRCP 12(b)(6)) Denied

District Court Procedural Issues
└ Pleadings
└ Sufficiency of Pleadings
Invalidity
└ Unpatentable Subject Matter (35 USC § 101)
└ Inventive Concept

The court denied defendants' renewed motion to dismiss on the ground that plaintiff's seven videoconferencing patents encompassed unpatentable subject matter and concluded that plaintiff sufficiently alleged that the asserted claims did not lack an inventive concept. "In the Amended Complaint, Plaintiff provides extensive factual allegations that 'the structure and function claimed by the '059 Patent were not well-understood, routine, or conventional as of the patent's priority date.' Plaintiff's allegations plausibly suggest that the display of participating transmission terminals in a videoconference was accomplished in an unconventional way, and nothing in the '059 Patent contradicts these allegations. . . . [W]hether the claim elements and their ordered combination is simply well known, routine, and conventional is a question of fact."
