

Second Life

● This article is more than 8 years old

Virtual world Second Life to be reincarnated, with Oculus Rift

Linden Lab to launch brand new version of its pioneering digital world in 2015, making use of new technology

Stuart Dredge

✉ @stuardredge

Tue 24 Jun 2014 10.00 EDT

Whatever happened to virtual world Second Life after the flurry of hype and influx of brands in 2005 and 2006? You don't hear much about it nowadays.

Actually, Second Life never went away; it was the media and brands that once flocked to it who melted away. The world's existing community of around 1m users carried on with their virtual lives much as they had before.

Second Life's parent company Linden Lab wasn't the future of marketing or the next billion-dollar technology acquisition as some suggested, but it did continue evolving into a stable, sustainable business.

Now, in 2014, it has a new chief executive and renewed ambitions to break out of its niche. Ambitions which include launching a completely new version of Second Life, as well as making it work with the now-Facebook-owned Oculus Rift virtual reality headset.

"With technology, market interest, hardware and software available, now is the time to give it another big shot. We have the experience to do it more than anyone else," CEO Ebbe Altberg told TheNextWeb, adding that the new version of Second Life will launch in beta form in 2015, then commercially in 2016.

"It's a massive project to do a new virtual world. To start from the ground up we're hiring 40-50 more people... We're not going to constrain ourselves with backwards compatibility."

Meta Platforms, Inc.

Exhibit 1095 1/7

Page 001

That in itself may be controversial, given the fact that many of Second Life's users have been immersed in the virtual world for a little over a decade now, including building (and often selling) their own virtual objects using its in-world economy. Migrating them across will be a major task.

TheNextWeb describes the Oculus Rift integration for Second Life as being in a "very early version", with the company still working on how people will control their virtual characters, if they can't see a mouse and keyboard.

Former Yahoo executive Altberg joined Linden Lab in February this year, and quickly made some tough decisions, axing spin-off projects dio, Versu and Creatorverse.

For now, the company's business is focused on Second Life, as well as children's iPad app Blocksworld - which it acquired in January 2013 - digital games service Desura and creation game Patterns.

Minecraft looms large in those new products, and may well also serve as inspiration for the new Second Life. That's no surprise: Mojang's blocky crafting game has found the mainstream audience - nearly 50m sales so far - that has so far eluded Linden Lab.

Then again, Altberg may be looking more to the words of Facebook chief executive Mark Zuckerberg, who announced his company's \$2bn acquisition of Oculus VR in March 2014 with a prediction that virtual reality will go far beyond gaming.

"Imagine enjoying a court side seat at a game, studying in a classroom of students and teachers all over the world or consulting with a doctor face-to-face -- just by putting on goggles in your home," wrote Zuckerberg.

"This is really a new communication platform. By feeling truly present, you can share unbounded spaces and experiences with the people in your life. Imagine sharing not just moments with your friends online, but entire experiences and adventures."

To do that, Oculus Rift will need developers to create those "unbounded spaces and experiences", with Linden Lab having more experience than most in the area.

Who knows, if the company does a good enough job with Second Life's second life, perhaps Zuckerberg will reach for his wallet again.

Oculus Rift - 10 reasons why all eyes are back on virtual reality

I hope you appreciated this article. Before you move on, I was hoping you would consider taking the step of supporting the Guardian's journalism.

From Elon Musk to Rupert Murdoch, a small number of billionaire owners have a powerful hold on so much of the information that reaches the public about what's happening in the world. The Guardian is different. We have no billionaire owner or shareholders to consider. Our journalism is produced to serve the public interest - not profit motives.

And we avoid the trap that befalls much US media - the tendency, born of a desire to please all sides, to engage in false equivalence in the name of neutrality. While fairness guides everything we do, we know there is a right and a wrong position in the fight against racism and for reproductive justice. When we report on issues like the climate crisis, we're not afraid to name who is responsible. And as a global news organization, we're able to provide a fresh, outsider perspective on US politics - one so often missing from the insular American media bubble.

Around the world, readers can access the Guardian's paywall-free journalism because of our unique reader-supported model. That's because of people like you. Our readers keep us independent, beholden to no outside influence and accessible to everyone - whether they can afford to pay for news, or not.

If you can, please consider supporting the Guardian today. Thank you.

Betsy Reed

Editor, Guardian US

Single	Monthly	Annual
$7 per month	$13 per month

Continue → Remind me in May

Related stories

Oculus Rift virtual reality headset to ship with Xbox One controller - as it happened

🕒 11 Jun 2015

💬 11

Facebook to launch social virtual reality experiences using Oculus Rift

🕒 27 Mar 2015

💬 7

Oculus VR founder on the key to virtual reality's success: 'People are narcissists'

🕒 7 Jan 2015

💬 13

The ultimate internet glossary: from 4chan to Zynga

🕒 11 Sept 2014

💬 128

Oculus Rift CEO: we want to put 1 billion people in virtual reality

🕒 7 May 2014

💬 65

More from Headlines

Mar-a-Lago
Donald Trump huddles with advisers after initial surprise of indictment

🕒 3h ago3h ago

Florida
State reels after two children allegedly 'die at hands of their caregivers'

🕒 7h ago

'A brain injury and a life sentence'
Hidden legacy of male violence against women

🕒 14m ago

Finland
Voting begins in knife-edge election

🕒 15m ago

Minnesota
Republican donor convicted of sex trafficking teenage girls

🕒 17h ago

comments (55)

This discussion is now closed for comments but you can still sign in or create your Guardian account to join the discussion next time

Sort by

Oldest ▾

Per page

100 ▾

Display threads

Collapsed ▾

Ysabelle

24 Jun 2014 10:48

9 ↑

The eleventh anniversary celebrations have begun at Second Life, so the place is definitely still alive and kicking.

As for the Oculus, well it's not exactly a surprising development. There's huge potential in these virtual worlds. I think people expected too much of SL in the early days.

View more comments

Most viewed

