The streaming video software developer Move Networks has emerged from stealth mode to announce its first institutional round of venture funding, an $11.3 million installment intended to spur the company to positive cash flow by year's end.

Steamboat Ventures, Walt Disney's investment arm, and Hummer Winblad Venture Partners co-led the round.

The cash comes about two and a half years after Move refocused its efforts on delivering long-form video efficiently. Move provides video services to broadcasters and publishers, including media networks such as Fox Interactive, the CW Network, E! Online and Televisa.
