Mitch Verboncoeur is a Principal in McKool Smith's Austin office. He focuses his practice on high-technology, intellectual property, and commercial litigation. He has represented plaintiffs and defendants in federal district courts, federal circuit courts, and the Supreme Court across a range of technologies, including cable television, video coding, RF hardware, and cellular technologies.

Mitch's experience includes presenting and cross-examining witnesses at trial, developing trial strategies, arguing claim construction, and drafting appellate briefs. Among other successes, he has helped secure exclusion orders for his clients from the International Trade Commission. He has successfully developed and implemented multi-venue litigation strategies for enforcing intellectual property portfolios.

Mitch's pro bono experience includes appellate briefing and successfully negotiating a joint stipulation of remand from the Second Circuit on behalf of asylum-seekers.

While attending law school, Mitch was a student supervisor with the Yale Landlord-Tenant Legal Services Clinic and provided a full range of legal services to low-income New Haven tenants. He was also a term-time law clerk with New Haven Legal Assistance, where he provided legal services to low-income New Haven residents.

During college, Mitch worked with an astrophysics research team using computational methods to study planet formation and analyze the orbital stability of extrasolar planets. He was also a Cornell Scholar and the 2014 Scholar-Athlete of the Year.
