Petitioner

v.

S.M.R INNOVATIONS LTD and Y.M.R TECH LTD
Patent Owners

Inter Partes Review Case No. IPR2024-01050
U.S. Patent No. 7,969,990

REPLY TO PATENT OWNER'S PRELIMINARY RESPONSE RE FINTIV
IN LIGHT OF TRANSFER

On Nov. 14, 2024, the original district court (W.D. Tex.) granted transfer to the Northern District of California. Ex. 1047. On Dec. 9, 2024, the transferee court scheduled an initial case management conference for April 16, 2024. Accordingly, there is no trial date and there will be no schedule until months after this Board rules on institution (by Jan. 30, 2025). Given the changed facts, the Fintiv arguments advanced in Patent Owner’s Preliminary Response (“POPR”) no longer apply.

The POPR argued that discretionary denial is proper because the original trial date would precede the final written decision by two months. Paper 6, 10-11. This is no longer true. Analyzing similar facts where a parallel case was transferred from Texas to N.D. Cal, the Board held the fact “that no trial date has been set weighs significantly against exercising [] discretion to deny institution of the proceeding.” Google v. Uniloc 2017, IPR2020-00441, Paper 13 at 33-36 (Jul 17, 2020). The POPR also highlighted resources expended by the parties and the expectation that the Texas court will have conducted a claim construction hearing before institution. Paper 6, 11-12. In fact, no claim construction hearing was conducted before transfer. In Google, the original district court case had progressed much further—a claim construction order had issued and fact discovery was closed. Google, Paper 13 at 36. Nonetheless, the Board declined to exercise its discretion, finding all other Fintiv factors “small in comparison” to the “various impacts of transferring [from Texas] to [N.D. Cal.]” Id. at 38. Here too, transfer is dispositive of the Fintiv analysis.

Respectfully submitted,
