Red Shark Bike Board RED SHARK

Red Shark Bike Board $3,000

Red Shark trimaran bike is designed to give cyclists a pedal-powered workout. The Sport model is billed as the fastest and for the most serious athletes. Red Shark Sport is built to train fitness, and gets a time trial or triathlon inspired cockpit, with a healthy dose of carbon components and clipless pedals.

Forward propulsion is provided by an impeller directly under the mast continuing down from the bottom bracket with a direct drive gear shaft. Directional control is handled by a pair of rudders directly under the front mast, turned by the standard bike handlebars that are offered on various models.

Tandem Jetovator JETOVATOR

Tandem Jetovator $9,475

The new Tandem Jetovator makes flying easier than ever and offers new flyers the option of training with a certified flight instructor. This is the perfect addition to any Hydro-flight Rental Operation who are looking to maximize revenue and operator safety. The Tandem Jetovator has twin controls, allowing it to be controlled from the front or rear seat. New riders can fly in comfort knowing they have an instructor in the back that can take over the controls at any time. The Tandem is also perfect for offering brief demo rides for younger passengers or people who just want to experience the thrill of Hydro-flight without the need for comprehensive training.

The Lift Efoil Lets You Glide Over The Water

MAN OF MANY, 21 OCT 2017

2 SHARES

Have you ever wanted to experience the feeling of flying over the water? Now you can, thanks to Lift. The Puerto Rican company just unveiled the first electric-powered hydrofoil surfboard, featuring a submerged hydrofoil which lifts the eFoil completely out of the water. The board has an electric motor housed within the hydrofoil that lets you ride the water without doing any work at all, kind of similar to an electric skateboard, but much, much cooler.

The eFoil can reach speeds of up to 25 MPH and has a range of 15 miles. Controlled via a wireless handheld unit, the controller is connected to the board via Bluetooth; speed is adjusted by pressing the throttle. The controller also has a screen that displays battery speed and charge, and floats to the surface of the water so if you drop it while riding a wave; you can easily find it.

You'll get a solid 45 minutes of hang time thanks to a lithium battery, which was designed specifically for the rugged marine environment. It's enclosed in a special corrosion resistant, waterproof housing. It also recharges quickly and easily – just plug it in and in about two hours, you'll have a full charge.

The eFoil is available in two different sizes. It comes in a standard size, which offers more stability thanks to a bigger deck. The smaller E1 Sport model turns quicker and is more nimble. The eFoil comes in four different colours, carbon blue, purple, free and black.

The Gong eFoil is one of the most affordable and accessible eFoils on the market. It's a great option for those who want to get into eFoiling without breaking the bank. The Gong eFoil is also a great option for those who want to progress in their eFoiling skills. As you get more comfortable, you can start to push the board harder and try more challenging conditions. The Gong eFoil can handle it all.

Where to buy:
- Gong website

Options & Trade-ins:
- Max. Speed: 28 km/h
- Max. Range: 30 km
- Weight with Battery: 17 kg

What we like:
- Affordable
- Easy to use
- Powerful motor
- Good for beginners

What we don't like:
- Not as powerful as other models
- Not good for experienced riders

The Gong eFoil is a great option for those who want to get into eFoiling without breaking the bank. The wide board and powerful motor make it easy to get up and going, and the stability of the board makes it easy to learn how to ride waves.

What is an eFoil?

An eFoil is a surfboard with a hydrofoil attached to the bottom. The hydrofoil is a wing-like structure that lifts the surfboard out of the water as it gains speed. This reduces drag and allows the surfboard to travel faster and more efficiently.

How does an eFoil work?

An eFoil works by using the principle of lift. As the surfboard moves through the water, the hydrofoil creates an upward force that lifts the surfboard out of the water. This reduces drag and allows the surfboard to travel faster and more efficiently.

How to eFoil?

To eFoil, you will need to first get up on the surfboard. Once you are up, you will need to paddle to get enough speed for the hydrofoil to lift you out of the water. Once you are out of the water, you will need to use your body weight to control the board. You can lean forward to go faster and lean backward to slow down.

If you are new to eFoiling, it is recommended that you start in small waves. This will give you more time to get used to the feeling of eFoiling before you start riding in larger waves.

Make sure to wear a leash when eFoiling. This will prevent your board from getting away from you if you fall off.

Be aware of your surroundings when eFoiling. Avoid eFoiling in areas where there are other people or boats.

Have fun! eFoiling is a great way to enjoy the water and get some exercise.

What happens if I fall off?

If it's your first time on an efoil you will probably fall off when trying to stand up. Don't worry if you fall off, as you should hit the water relatively softly, and assuming you're wearing a personal flotation device, you should be fine.

Do make sure to use the last bit of control you have when riding the board to bail, by pushing or jumping away from the board. It's important to put as much distance as possible between you and the board when falling off to avoid getting hit by the propeller.

It's important to remember to stop your board after you've fallen into the water as the efoil will only stop if you release the trigger found on the controller. The efoil doesn't have a leash (for safety reasons) meaning you will have to swim back to it.

How are they different from surfboards?

Efoils are different to surfboards in a number of ways. Firstly, you don't need a wave to ride an efoil, all you need is a charged battery and waves might actually make it harder to ride the efoil.

Secondly, you can go much faster than on a surfboard and your board won't be making contact with the water at faster speeds, giving you a smoother and more comfortable ride.

For surfboard enthusiasts, electric surfboards offer an alternative to efoils, however they maintain contact with the water and do not have hydrofoil technology. Instead, electric surfboards offer a motorized version of a surfboard.

This $12,000 electric surfboard is the latest craze on Lake Tahoe

The first rule of eFoiling, says Matt Cook, is "fall early." Like, as soon as you feel your board start zooming under your feet.

"When I gave a little wobble, take that as your opportunity to bump off," said Cook, 39, of Truckee, who started eFoiling eFoil lessons on Lake Tahoe in July ($199 for 90 minutes).

During a blustery September morning on Tahoe's West Shore, Cook explained the tricky physics of riding an eFoil, an electric hydrofoil, a new breed of powered watercraft popping up on waterways around the world. It's basically a short surfboard with a 4-foot-long metal plow bolted to its belly and affixed with a battery-powered propeller. When it gets up to speed, a eFoiler (the plow creates enough lift underfoot to raise the board off the water's surface and carry the rider a foot or so into the air.

"It's your own personal flying surfboard," Cook said. "It's honestly fun."

But it's not cheap. The standard eFoil from industry leader Lift Foils, based in Puerto Rico, runs $12,000, making only models a few ranks for the 1 percent. Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg has been spotted this summer riding his eFoil on Lake Tahoe and in Hawaii.

Hydrofoiling — a surfboard foil setup without electricity — has been around for about 20 years, pioneered in Hawaii by big-wave surfer Laird Hamilton. Riders gain propulsion in flat water by pumping the board up and down with their legs or surfing for momentum of a wave.

EFoiling is newer and doesn't require as much physical exertion or expertise. After you nudge an eFoil into the water and hoist yourself aboard, you throttle it up with a handheld remote. The difficulty is in balancing yourself just right to allow the wing to lift you into the air. This is called riding "on foil" — like sailing on a pontoon.

Our factory runs about 99 minutes, and cruising speeds vary. Most new riders feel comfortably eFoiled around 12 mph, Cook says. But the right-sized rider on the right-sized board can get up to 40 mph.

The activity took off two years ago when Lift Foils shipped the first boards to eager water sports enthusiasts around the planet.

It feels both revolutionary and like a natural outgrowth of our broader shift toward personalized, battery-powered transportation, appealing to the demographic that rolls hoverboards, Onewheels, e-skateboards and scooters through downtown San Francisco. EBike natural the techy phenomenon from the city streets to lakes and oceans.

EBike represent a promising alternative to Jet Skis and waverunners, which have dominated the market for recreational personal watercraft for decades, says Dave Wagner, chief financial officer of Lift Foils. They don't need gas or a boat ramp and they're easier to transport.

"There's room up (onshore) for something like this," Wagner said. "There's a huge growth opportunity."

The company has shipped several thousand boards since it launched in 2016. Wagner estimates the worldwide demand at about 150,000 boards. The big markets are the U.S., Germany, France and the Middle East, he said.

EBike have been turning heads in wavetanks from L.A. to New York recently. They haven't been incorporated into a competitive sport, but Cook has some ideas percolating for time trial speed competitions.

Enthusiasm for eFoils spreads really, Wagner said. "When one or two people get a foil in a given area, you end up generating demand from people who think, 'Oh, that looks fun.'"

It does look fun. But getting up on foil takes practice. During my first lesson, on the West Shore with Cook, I bailed or fell off at least 20 times.

When bailing, Cook said, it's critical to avoid what he calls "burning." "That's when the board ribs one direction and you keep cyclonic, pecking your falling body directly over the plow. That could mean a nasty bruise or even blood and stitches on a bad landing. Whatever you do, be advised we...don't burn."

I heeded twice. Luckily no blood was spilled. He was right, it hurts. Like catching the business end of an aluminum baseball bat.

What makes the pain more tolerable, though, is the exuberance of getting up on foil, even just for a moment. You feel it in every air it bypasses. Everything goes quiet and smooth. No bouncing through chop or swiping through surface tension. It's like riding a warm knife-edge through butter. Suddenly you're floating peacefully over a beautiful lake, relieved enough to notice the surrounding trees and mountains.

"I mean in your psyche," said A.C. Cromley, who runs Tahoe Eefy and started eFoiling eFoil lessons last year. ($199 for 90 minutes). "You're able to see the lake in ways that nobody else can."

Cook sees big potential. He is already planning to expand his Tahoe business next summer: more boards and one or two new instructors.

"No one I've brought out here says this is boring," Cook said. "I mean this is pretty rad-genius."
