Once upon a time, bras were made simply to hold your breasts in place. But, these days, they do so much more. The latest high-tech designs aim to fix all sorts of dilemmas — from where to keep your keys on a night out, to monitoring your heart rate as you're working out.

And now, this patented design from the U.S. has been created with exactly that idea in mind. The bra features two 10cm pockets sewn into each side panel in which to store your valuables.

Chantelle's verdict: This sounds genius, because so many of us do this anyway — albeit not as elegantly.

The pockets here are basically two slings under each arm.

However, there is room to stash bank notes or a credit card without ruining the shape of the bra.

You'd probably need to avoid wearing anything too elasticated or tight-fitting if you were carrying keys. Still, it's less fiddly and cheaper than a clutch bag.

Chantelle claims Sleep Bra (pictured) is able to keep larger breast contained while providing comfort for a better night's sleep

If you're like most women, you dream of the moment when you can step through your door at the end of a long day and take off your uncomfortable bra. However, now, so-called sleep bras — made from soft fabric, with no underwires or tight elastics — are becoming popular to wear throughout the night, with some larger breasted-women saying they help them sleep more easily.

Chantelle's verdict: Women who have larger breasts can struggle with the 'side to side' issue when they sleep.

This means their breasts can go in different directions when they lie on their back, or flop down when they turn to lie on their side, making it feel as if they are stretching their skin.

Chantelle says Ceramicool Seamless Sports Bra (pictured) is comfortable enough for everyday wear and could help to keep hot flushes at bay

Utilisng the latest in fabric technology, this bra is made from Ceramicool, the same substance used to make china or tiles. According to the maker, 'it's the same principle as your dog lying on a ceramic tile floor to cool down . . . ceramic is naturally cool and dissipates heat incredibly fast'.

So effective is this fibre in drawing heat away from the skin that, it is claimed, it can cool the body by as much as 1c.

Chantelle's verdict: This bra does actually feel cool as soon as you put it on — which, at first, almost makes it seem damp.

When we tried it on a tester, it did warm up, though, and she noticed keep the skin on her chest a little cooler when she started working ou

Chantelle claims Classic T-shirt bra (pictured) gives a smooth finish under clothes

As many as nine in ten of us have slightly different-sized breasts.

To try to fix the problem, this bra uses thin memory foam cups that mould to the body in response to heat and pressure — so the cups contract around each bosom to give a snug fit, even if they are a different size.

Chantelle's verdict: There is a detailed online questionnaire to fill in before you buy the bra, which asks everything from how your cups and straps usually fit, to what breast shape you have.

To get a more exact fit, the company even offers half-sizes in the cups. The idea is that you choose the size for the larger breast, so the smaller one gets cupped by the memory foam.

Having seen how well memory foam can work in other products, this is a good solution, as long as the difference between your breast sizes is not too big.

This style has pleated, non-slip straps, too, to stop it falling off your shoulders — another source of irritation for many women.

While it's not the first bra to feature memory foam, combined with its materials and straps, it does address a few common annoyances.

It also gives a really smooth finish under clothes. But — perhaps bec design — it's not cheap.

Fans goes wild over

Chantelle says Shapeez (pictured) is a little expensive but gives a smooth effect under clothes

A few rolls of back fat spilling over your bra strap can ruin the smooth line of your T-shirt. But this bra promises to eliminate the problem by working like shapewear for your back. Instead of back straps, a large, flat panel of elasticated fabric smooths down any excess flesh on your back and around your under arms to give '360 degrees of slimming and smoothing'.

Chantelle's verdict: Most of the lumps and bumps on your back tend to be due to your bra digging in and causing flesh to roll over the top. By getting rid of those, this bra does give a smoother effect under clothes.

But, as there are no fastenings, it has to be put on over your head, which can be a struggle, especially because there are underwires at the front. It's surprisingly comfortable, though, if a little expensive.

Chantelle claims Weartech Gow Smart Sports Bra (pictured) may not give sufficient support for rigorous exercise due to its stretchy fabric

We've all seen heart rate monitors worn as watches or bracelets to measure the pulse in your wrist.

To get an even more accurate reading, then, it makes sense to design a place for a sensor in your bra, which is, of course, closer to your heart. This bra comes with an area at the front where you can easily clip on the heart rate monitor that comes with it.

This connects via Bluetooth to a personal training app on your smartphone that tells you your heart rate and how many calories you've burnt.

Chantelle's Verdict: This sports bra only seems to come in sizes sma large.

The monitor is easy to attach — you don't feel it as you exercise and strong.

However, what you gain in technology, you lose in the fabric, which, i stretchy to support you sufficiently during rigorous exercise.

So, while you may end up closer to achieving your fitness goals, you thank you in the longer-term.

Haifly Adhesive Invisible Silicone Gel Push Up Bra With Adjustable Straps, £9.99, amazon.co.uk

Chantelle says Haifly Adhesive Invisible Silicone Gel Push Up Bra With Adjustable Straps (pictured) can be fiddly

If you want to wear a backless, strapless or plunging outfit, this invisible bra promises to be your best-kept secret. It consists of two stick-on pieces of silicone, approximately the size, shape and colour of chicken fillets, which peel on and off, thanks to a sticky side on each one. They are hooked together in the middle with a transparent clasp and you can also hook them up to see-through shoulder straps, if needed.

Chantelle’s verdict: The weight of each fillet stuck to the underside of your boobs means this bra tends to weigh them down, rather than support them.

They are also so sticky on one side that, once you’ve got them on, it can be fiddly to re-arrange them into a different position.

In my opinion, the best way for this bra to be useful is to unhook the fillets and place them inside an existing bra, to help you go up a cup size.

Chantelle's verdict: I can see that this is a nicely designed bra. But, e claims made, I don't think anyone would want to rely on it and risk go without any deodorant!

However, this material will certainly help stop any sweat patches, as i moisture so quickly. It looks great, too.

Chantelle says Anita Active Air Control Delta Pad Sports Bra (pictured) keeps sweat at bay

This lightweight bra is designed to allow in lots of air to keep you cool during a workout.

The main support for the breasts are two triangular Delta cups — with a hole in the base of each — to allow airflow from below.

The cups are also covered in an outer layer of mesh fabric which enables air to flow out of the sides, giving you your very own personal air conditioning system.

The wide, under-breast band is also made of a breathable fabric with air holes to add to the whirlwind effect, while the cups are lined with material to wick away sweat and moisture.

Chantelle's verdict: Because sports bras usually compress the breasts in order to stop them moving about, they can get very sweaty underneath durin exercise.

During a tough workout on the weights machine, our tester noticed h get quite as sweaty, though she would have liked a little more structu on the running machine.

The bra also looked great in bright pink and quite sexy, thanks to the
