

TECH

This start-up's app lets anyone from pro athletes to kids in their dorm be a sports announcer

PUBLISHED THU, DEC 20 2018-4:15 PM EST | UPDATED THU, DEC 20 2018-7:14 PM EST

Jessica Golden
@JGOLDENS

Eric Chemi

SHARE f X in ✉

KEY POINTS

- SportsCastr is a live streaming app that lets users announce games as they happen.
- Some professional athletes are using the app to practice for a media career when they're finished playing on the field.
- The app has raised about $3 million from investors including former NBA Commissioner David Stern and Syracuse University basketball coach Jim Boeheim.

If you’ve ever dreamed of being a sports commentator, it’s never been easier to get your voice out to the public, in a high-quality professional way.

A new company called SportsCastr is allowing amateurs the chance to get behind the mic, broadcast games and offer their own sports commentary. Using a mobile phone, the SportsCastr app uses technology with green screens and graphics to give a professional broadcasting look and feel.

“We’ve created essentially a studio in an app so you can be in your dorm room or you could be in the locker room, and with one click you’re live and we make you look great,” said Kevin April, CEO of SportsCastr.

It’s not just for amateurs. Professional athletes like New York Giants Safety Landon Collins are using SportsCastr to prepare for a media career after his playing years.

“I play in front 120,000 fans, but speaking in front of people I break down,” Collins said. “So it took it took a lot of me to do that especially in front of like random people.”

Collins, a 3-time Pro Bowl selection, says he’s given lots of thought to life after football, and he’d love to be on camera.

“My mom always said I was a handsome young man and I have a face for the camera ... so that’s what I want my role to be,” said Collins who studied mass communications at the University of Alabama.

Landon Collins Tackles Broadcasting The Giants safety testing out his broadcasting skills for life after football.

Source: Sportscastr

Because so many other football players have broadcast ambitions, the NFL Players Association sees value in SportsCastr. The union invested a minority stake in the company. Other big-name investors include former NBA Commissioner David Stern, Syracuse University basketball coach Jim Boeheim and NBA player-turned broadcaster Steve Smith. April says the company has raised around $3 million so far.

The deal with the NFLPA “has given us complete access to not just current players but retired ones as well,” said April.

The company is currently working with players to set up and create opportunities for when their careers end and to try and maximize their time on the field.

“There is a lot of synergy there and we are working very closely together,” April said.

The deal with NFLPA allows players to lend their expertise to fans and given them a unique perspective or takeaway.

“I can tell you what happened, why this play was successful or why this person got beat, from the perspective of a defensive player,” said Collins.

The Future of Sports Broadcasting? SportsCastr allows amateurs the ability to live broadcast during games and offer their commentary

Source: Sportscastr

SportsCastr has also signed recent deal with the WNBPA and data specialist STATS to provide the same real-time statistics used in normal televised games.

As traditional sports media faces more competition to keep viewers’ attention, this could be a hint of how fans will watch sports in the future. The industry has already seen many companies experiment with giving viewers the choice in which stream they want to watch.

For example, during the NCAA basketball tournament, Turner Sports offers the same game in multiple ways, such as a stream where fans of each school can watch announces biased toward their own team.

ESPN has offered similar multi-channel commentator options for major events like the NCAA football championship game. Amazon has experimented with its Thursday Night Football stream, giving viewers a choice of commentators, including an all-women broadcasting team or foreign language streams that customize the viewing experience.

April said SportsCastr hopes to democratize the broadcast even more by providing users the tools to do so.

“The target is really any fan, athlete or anyone with an opinion on sports,” said April. “What we believe is that we should get rid of gatekeepers that network television is telling you who you should listen to — that’s antiquated.”

IPR2025-00269
SportsCastr Inc. EX-2010

TRENDING NOW

- 1

New York AG says $175 million Trump fraud bond isn't properly backed, should be voided
- 2

Nasdaq falls more than 2% to post 6th straight losing day as Nvidia craters 10%
- 3

Citadel Securities blasts Trump Media CEO Devin Nunes over DJT short selling letter
- 4

Something strange has been happening with jobless claims numbers lately
- 5

Man sets himself on fire outside Trump trial courthouse in New York

Sponsored Links by Taboola

FROM THE WEB

Stunner In Her 60s Says She Swears By This Chuck Norris 2 Min Routine

Roundhouse Provisions

Learn More

Try This Reverse Mortgage Estimator (Only If You're Over 55)

CHIP Reverse Mortgage

Get Quote

Subscribe to CNBC PRO

Subscribe to Investing Club

Licensing & Reprints

News Tips

Got a confidential news tip? We want to hear from you.

GET IN TOUCH

Advertise With Us

PLEASE CONTACT US

CNBC Newsletters

Sign up for free newsletters and get more CNBC delivered to your inbox

SIGN UP NOW

Get this delivered to your inbox, and more info about our products and services.