

I. Personal Information

Name: Latifur Khan

School: Engineering and Computer Science

Department: Computer Science

Date: 02/15/2025

II. Professional Narrative

Dr. Latifur Khan is currently a Professor in the Computer Science department at the University of Texas, Dallas where he has been teaching and conducting research since September 2000. He received his Ph.D. and M.S. degrees in Computer Science from the University of Southern California (USC), in August of 2000, and December of 1996 respectively. He is currently supported by grants from NSF, ARMY, NIST, ONR, NSA, IBM, HPE and the Air Force Office of Scientific Research. Dr. Khan's research emphasizes several broad areas including big data analytics and management, generative AI including large language models (LLM), data mining, complex data management including semantic web, and geospatial data and cyber security. Recently, he has become a Fellow of IEE, BCS, and IET. At UT Dallas he has introduced and taught a new regular lecture-oriented course, "Big Data Management and Analytics."

Dr. Khan applies his "Big data analytics" research in data mining/machine learning (online learning, metric learning, adversarial learning, domain adaptation), and cybersecurity areas. With regard to data mining/machine learning, Dr. Khan is researching semi-supervised learning algorithms to classify evolving data streams including brand new class or emerging class.

Dr. Khan's group develops ConflIBERT, a domain-specific pretrained language model for conflict and political violence. ConflIBERT consistently outperforms traditional transformer based large language model (LLM) BERT (trained on generic corpora) in the conflict and political violence domain. Further, it outperforms other models even with limited training data, which addresses an endemic problem for researchers due to high annotation costs.

In his political science applications, Dr. Khan's group has observed that the collected data follow a skewed distribution (data from a few classes appear much more frequently than those of other classes). His group has proposed a novel set convolution (SetConv) operation and episodic training strategy to extract a single representative for each class so that classifiers can later be trained by a balanced class distribution. Dr. Khan has proved that his proposed algorithm is permutation-invariant despite the order of inputs, and experiments on multiple large-scale benchmark text datasets show the superiority of our proposed framework when compared to other state-of-the-art (SOTA) methods.

Dr. Latifur Khan has published over 300 papers in premier journals such as VLDB, Journal of Web Semantics, IEEE TDKE, IEEE TDSC, IEEE TSMC, and AI Research and in prestigious conferences such as AAAI, IJCAI, CIKM, ICDE, ACM GIS, IEEE ICDM, IEEE BigData, ECML/PKDD, PAKDD, ACM Multimedia, ACM WWW, ICWC, ACM SACMAT, IEEE ICSC, IEEE Cloud and INFOCOM. He has been invited to give keynotes and invited talks at a number of conferences hosted by IEEE and ACM. In addition, he has conducted tutorial sessions in prominent conferences such as SIGKDD 2016, 2017, IJCAI 2017, AAAI 2017, SDM 2017, IEEE CollaborateCom 2014, CloudCom 2013, PAKDD 2011& 2012, DASFAA 2012, ACM WWW 2005, MIS2005, DASFAA 2007, and WI 2008. As of today, fifteen Ph.D. students have graduated under Dr. Khan's supervision and one of them (Dr. Feng Luo) is currently working as an associate professor in Computer Science department at Clemson University, USA. Dr. Khan also collaborates actively with top researchers from MIT, UIUC, UMN, Purdue and IBM TJ Watson Research. (For further information please check: <http://www.utdallas.edu/~lkhan>)
