

Cars • Auto Financing • Event Tickets • Jobs • Real Estate • Online Degrees • Business Opportunities • Shopping

Search powered by XaploCaf How do I find it? Subscribe to paper

Home News Travel Money Sports Life Tech Weather

Become a member of the USA TODAY community now! Log in | Become a member What's this?

Money Markets Economy Company News Media Cars Personal Finance Real Estate Small Business Jobs

GET A QUOTE: Enter symbol(s) or Keywords GO Markets chart

App Store for iPhone already a hit with developers

Updated 53m ago | Comment | Recommend

Enlarge

Apple launches its 500-application, Web-based App Store today. With it, iPhone and iPod Touch users can enhance the devices in many ways.

TALKING TECH

WHAT READERS ARE SAYING:

Ill-Stylez wrote:
How about copy & paste, e-mail folder management, instant messaging (Yahoo!, Hotmail, etc.) ...

christfliz wrote:
I hope that Apple lets SlingBox become a developer, imagine watching and controlling your TV, and depending on which model your DVR, on your phone or touch ...

lileq wrote:
Very simple I want AIM for the iPhone. I would also like Office for the iPhone as well as an eBook Reader. Then I would be set.

she is HOLLYWOOD wrote:
... I'd also like to see a multi-platform messenger (a la Trillian that connects to AIM, MSN, MySpace IM), a food diary (in a calorie counter) and a Xanga.com application ...

By Jefferson Graham, USA TODAY

E-mail | Save | Print | RSS

Mix it

Apple CEO Steve Jobs expected to launch his App Store — the online venue for third-party iPhone and iPod Touch applications — with 200 software offerings; he ended up with more than 500.

"The reaction has been so strong," he says. "So many developers responded."

RELATED: Programmer quits job to write for iPhone

With 500 programs launching internationally today, "This is the biggest launch of my career," says Jobs.

The App Store is a way for owners of the iPhone and Touch (like the iPhone without the phone) to add games and other software and Web shortcuts to the devices. Heavyweight participants include Facebook, MySpace, AOL, eBay, Major League Baseball, Sega and Bank of America.

The App Store (AAPL) is timed to spur sales of the new iPhone, which goes on sale at 8 a.m. Friday with a lower price ($199 from $399) and faster network. The App Store is available as a free download for owners of the old iPhone and $9.99 for Touch owners.

Consumers initially will buy the new iPhone for its price and speed, but later on applications will make the sale, says Tim Bajarin, an independent analyst at Creative Strategies.

"When IBM introduced the PC, it was good, but it didn't take off until people started discovering the software," he says. The breadth of the applications "dramatically differentiates the iPhone" from competing smartphones such as the Treo and BlackBerry, he adds.

"The games are what you'd find on a computer, not on a phone," he says. "You'll end up with PC-class applications that fit in your pocket."

Having an application on the device — instead of going to a website to use it — makes it a quicker, more robust experience, says Chris DeVolfe, CEO of social network MySpace. His app instantly updates you on friends' activities. You can post directly to MySpace photos taken with the iPhone's camera.

"You do more of the work on the device than over the Net, so the load time should be quicker," he says.

Another new application is from Pandora, which lets you create customized Internet radio stations. Pandora is already available on other phones from AT&T (T) and Sprint, (S) for a monthly fee. On the iPhone, it is free. That makes it "a credible alternative to broadcast (radio)," in part because iPhones can be plugged into car stereos, founder Tim Westergren says.

The new offerings aren't only from the big guys. Xavier Camillo Costa, CEO of Digital Legends, a Barcelona game company, had never worked with Macs before but wanted to develop games for the phone. "You forget that it's a phone," says Costa, whose action game Kroll will launch in September for $9.99. "It has all the power of a computer."

Jobs says 25% of the apps will be free, and 90% of the ones for sale will be $9.99 or less. Apple gets 30% of the revenue.

Contributing: Michelle Kessler

READERS: What new iPhone applications are you most looking forward to, and why? Tell us in the comments.

Share this story:

Mix it

Yahoo! Buzz Digg Newsvine Reddit Facebook What's this?

Posted 14h 37m ago

Updated 53m ago

E-mail | Save | Print | RSS

To report corrections and clarifications, contact Reader Editor Brent Jones. For publication consideration in the newspaper, send comments to letters@usatoday.com. Include name, phone number, city and state for verification.

Guidelines: You share in the USA TODAY community, so please keep your comments smart and civil. Don't attack other readers personally, and keep your language decent. Use the "Report Abuse" button to make a difference. Read more.

Newspaper Home Delivery - Subscribe Today

Home • News • Travel • Money • Sports • Life • Tech • Weather

About USATODAY.com: Site Map | FAQ | Contact Us | Jobs with Us | Terms of Service
Privacy Policy/Your California Privacy Right | Media Kit | Press Room | Reprints and Permissions

News Your Way: Mobile News | Email News | IM Alerts | Add USATODAY.com RSS feeds | Podcasts | Widgets

Partners: USA WEEKEND | Sports Weekly | Education | Space.com

Copyright 2008 USA TODAY, a division of Gannett Co. Inc.