I. INTRODUCTION

Patent Owner previously sought discretionary denial because the district court's pending § 101 motion would make institution inefficient. The district court has since adjudicated the validity of the '591 patent, held the claims invalid under § 101, and dismissed the action with prejudice. The Director authorized this brief to address the consequences of that ruling. Ex. 3101.

Under these circumstances, discretionary denial is warranted. As the Director explained in Hulu LLC v. Piranha Media Distributions, LLC, institution of an inter partes review after a district court has already adjudicated the validity of the challenged claims would be an inefficient use of agency resources. IPR2024-01252, Paper 27 (Director Review Apr. 17, 2025 (informative)). Consistent with Hulu, the Board and Director have repeatedly exercised discretion to deny institution where a district court has invalidated the challenged patent.

The Board and Director has further explained that the possibility of a successful appeal does not change the analysis. If the Federal Circuit were to reverse the district court's decision, Petitioner remains free to litigate invalidity on remand. Petitioner never offered a stipulation committing to the IPR as its exclusive forum. This Petition was always a parallel, optional proceeding rather than a necessary one. The Director is not required to institute an IPR, and doing so here would serve no practical purpose.

II. THE DISTRICT COURT’S INVALIDITY JUDGMENT ELIMINATES ANY BASIS TO EXPEND FURTHER RESOURCES ON VALIDITY.

A. The Hulu Decision Supports Discretionary Denial.

On January 9, 2026, the district court granted Meta’s Rule 12 motion and held the ’591 patent claims invalid as directed to ineligible subject matter, dismissing the case with prejudice. Ex. 2001 at 15, 23; Ex. 2002. Numerous decisions confirm that discretionary denial is appropriate in this procedural posture, including Hulu LLC v. Piranha Media Distribution, LLC, IPR2024-01252, Paper 27 (Director Review Apr. 17, 2025). See also Google LLC v. Bootler, LLC, IPR2025-00967, -00968, Paper 10 (Director October 31, 2025); Google LLC v. TJTM Techs., LLC, IPR2025-00586, Paper 12 (August 14, 2025); Google LLC v. Sandpiper CDN, LLC, IPR2025-00846, -00952, Paper 10 (October 10, 2025); Shopify Inc. v. DKR Consulting LLC, IPR2025-00130, Paper 10 (PTAB May 29, 2025); Highlevel, Inc. v. Etison LLC, IPR2025-00234, Paper 12 (PTAB June 2, 2025).

In Hulu, the Director expressly considered—and rejected—the argument that a potential appeal counseled in favor of institution, explaining that “in the event the Federal Circuit reverses the district court’s decision, Petitioner may raise such invalidity arguments in the district court on remand,” which “is the better and more efficient approach.” Hulu at 2-3. The Director concluded that where “a district court already has found the challenged claims invalid, the efficiency and integrity of the patent system is best served by denying institution.” Hulu at 3.

The procedural posture here is indistinguishable. Petitioner challenged the claims of the '591 patent under § 101 at the district court in a Rule 12 motion to dismiss; the court agreed, and entered final judgment dismissing the case with prejudice. Id. at 2; see also Highlevel at 6; Exs. 2001-2002. As in Highlevel, there is no reason for the Director to deviate from the practice established in Hulu. Highlevel at 6 (“We see no reason to deviate from the informative decision [of Hulu] here.”).

B. The Fintiv Factors Also Support Discretionary Denial.

Although the Director in Hulu explained that the Fintiv framework “does not fit neatly” where a district court already invalidated challenged claims, the Director nonetheless recognized that Fintiv is grounded in the same efficiency considerations that control here. Hulu at 3. Boards that have elected to analyze the Fintiv factors in similar circumstances have found that they favor denial. E.g., Snap Inc. v. Blackberry Ltd., IPR2020-00392, Paper 8 at 10-12 (PTAB July 13, 2020) (acknowledging Fintiv framework “an uneasy fit” but still finding Fintiv analysis favored denial); AviaGames, Inc. v. Skillz Platform Inc., IPR 2022-00530, Paper 12 at 9-15 (PTAB August 9, 2022) (indicating Fintiv factors a poor fit, but still finding Fintiv factors 1-6 favored denial), remanded, Paper 14 (Director Mar. 2, 2023) (remanding for other reasons), denial reinstated, Paper 15 (Mar. 22, 2023). For the same reasons as in Snap and AviaGames, Fintiv favors denial.

Fintiv factor 1 favors denial because there is no stay in the parallel district court case because it has been dismissed with prejudice. See AviaGames at 23; Snap at 12.

Fintiv factor 2 favors denial because the district court has already adjudicated validity of the '591 patent, well before a FWD would issue in the present proceeding. See AviaGames at 12-13; Snap at 12.

Fintiv factor 3 favors denial because the parties have already invested substantial resources in multiple rounds of § 101 briefing and the district court has already completed its validity analysis. AviaGames at 13; Snap at 12.

Fintiv factor 4 favors denial because the claims were invalidated by the district court, such that the question of validity completely overlaps this proceeding. Exs. 2001-2002; AviaGames at 14.

Fintiv factor 5 favors denial because the parties are identical. Id.

Fintiv factor 6 also favors denial, for the reasons explained in Hulu and its progeny. See also AviaGames at 15.

Because all of the Fintiv factors favor denial, discretionary denial is appropriate, even under that framework.

III. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, to avoid wasting PTAB resources, avoid inefficiency, and protect the integrity of the patent system, discretionary denial is warranted.
