Nokia opens online software shop

Nokia has opened a new online shop, the Nokia Software Market, where users can customize their Nokia 9210 Communicators with innovative mobile applications. Specifically created for the device by various developers, these software applications can help improve business efficiency, competitiveness, personal productivity, and entertainment possibilities.

The applications can be purchased and downloaded from www.softwaremarket.nokia.com by either using the Nokia 9210 Communicator or a PC. On the website, customers will find an expanding selection of mobile software including personal productivity tools such as instant translators, entertainment like games, and tools allowing viewing and editing of different types of content. The Nokia Software Market also includes instructions about the installation process as well as online e-mail support.

"With the Nokia Software Market, we want to enable the users of the Nokia 9210 Communicator to shape their own mobile world. From this marketplace, they will be able to easily download the latest software applications based on the Symbian OS and tailor their Nokia 9210 Communicator to reflect their own personality, needs and lifestyle," said Pertti Korhonen, senior vice president, Mobile Software, Nokia.

The software applications for sale at the Nokia Software Market have either passed the Nokia OK process or been tested by the developers themselves using Nokia's guidelines. The Nokia OK logo signifies that these applications can be used with confidence in that they meet the testing criteria set by Nokia and are digitally signed to assure the integrity and the origin of the installation file.

For developers, the Nokia Software Market offers an efficient channel to sell their most innovative mobile software. More detailed information for developers on how to utilize the new marketplace and obtain the Nokia OK logo is available at www.forum.nokia.com.
