T-Mobile USA, Inc., No. 2:21-CV-72 (E.D. Tex. Nov. 10, 2021). "[T]he AGIS decision is inapposite for several reasons At its center, venue is a highly fact-specific inquiry. The fact that plaintiff in AGIS had access to agreements and could not prove proper venue does not necessarily mean—especially because of the factual-specificity of venue—that Plaintiff's somewhat analogous theory here will also fail. In fact, many of the facts upon which the Court decided venue in AGIS came directly from the agreements, cutting against Defendants' argument that they are irrelevant; they are, in fact, highly relevant. Defendants' other arguments about relevance are similarly unpersuasive."

"The burden Defendants complain of depends on how the term 'partner' is precisely defined by Plaintiff. . . . Plaintiff seems to be using the term in a colloquial sense, not in the legal sense of a 'partnership,' and not just in place of a 'contract,' but rather for any sort of business relationship that [Defendant] may enter with other organizations. . . . [T]he Court finds that the burden of producing all the discovery sought by Plaintiff regarding [Defendant's] 'partners,' the way Plaintiff uses it, outweighs the relevance. However, because the information Plaintiff seeks is still undoubtedly relevant, the Court finds that the Motion should be and hereby is granted to [a] limited extent narrowly tailored[.]"
