| Abstract            | A method and apparatus of pilot phase error estimation in an orthogonal frequency division multiplexed (OFDM) receiver including the steps of: determining pilot reference points corresponding to a plurality of pilots of an OFDM preamble waveform; and estimating an aggregate phase error of a subsequent OFDM data symbol relative to the pilot reference points using complex signal measurements corresponding to each of the plurality of pilots of the subsequent OFDM data symbol and the pilot reference points. For example, a maximum likelihood based estimation is performed using the complex signal measurements and the pilot reference points. Thus, the poor phase performance in a radio portion of the OFDM receiver is compensated for by the pilot phase error estimation in the | baseband portion of the OFDM receiver and improved OFDM signal tracking accomplished under poor SNR conditions.

U.S. Pat. No. 6633616 OFDM pilot tone tracking for wireless LAN

Patent Number: U.S. Pat. No. 6633616
Application Number: 09/935,081
Title OFDM pilot tone tracking for wireless LAN
Abstract A pilot phase tracking loop for an OFDM receiver including a phase rotator receiving an incoming signal, a fast Fourier transform coupled to a phase rotator output, and a pilot phase error metric including a discrete Fourier transform portion coupled to the phase rotator output. The pilot phase error metric determines a phase error estimate associated with a received OFDM symbol, e.g., a data symbol, from the phase rotator output. A loop filter is coupled to the pilot phase error metric output and an oscillator is coupled to the loop filter output. The oscillator output is coupled to the phase rotator to adjust the phase of subsequent OFDM symbols of the incoming signal. Phase noise introduced by a radio portion of the OFDM receiver and OFDM transmitter is reduced by the baseband portion of the OFDM receiver improving OFDM signal tracking under poor SNR conditions.
